born September 10, 1833; died July 19, 1996.

The subject of this notice was born in the town of Coxsackie, on the Hudson River, in New York. At the age of eighteen his energetic spirit prompted him to join the ploneers who were then seeking a career in the unsettled West. He remained there, except for occasional visits to his home, until the close of the Civil War, when he returned to the East and settled in Richmond, Vignia, extablishing there the well known house of Simpson, Bass and Company, In a true Christian's. No worthy sufferer ever appealed to him in vain, no distress ever falled to elicit his sympatily or to secure some measure, the largest he could give, of aid from him. But he was a living exemplar of the command which forbids the doers of charity to let the left hand know of the good works of the right. His religious views were known alone to himself and his Maker. He was allied to no church organization—he had little faith in verbal professions on that subject. Those who know him, however, in financial reverses, in bodily suffering, in bereavement, in all the relations, domestic and social, of a long and arduous life, and were witnesses to his abnegation of self, even in trifles, for those he loved, to his open-handed liberality, to his staunch fidelity to those who won his respect and affection, to his tenderness with little children and infants, to his generosity to his dependents, to his unswerving truthfulness and neverbending homesty, feel that by the divinely appointed standard, "By their fruits ye shall know them," he was, in this life, of the "measure of a man that is of the angel."

As was, perhaps, not remarkable in a man of such a strong nature, his release from life was not until after weeks of great physical suffering, borne courageously and to the last with a thought of his dear ones and a desire to spare them distress. His remains were brought back to the home of his happy married life, and there interred in the family vauit which held the ashes of his beloved wife. The friends and neighbors gathered to do his memory honor represented all social classes, illustrating the triumph of a good life over all human projudice, sectional or individual.

What his departure means to those who were dependent upon him, his family, his friends, and especially his poor neighbors, not even they can yet appreciate, but he has left to them in his example of a useful and unselfish life a legacy of priceless, relue. This, and a legacy of priceless, relue. This, and a legacy of priceless, relue.
